The talent myth pervades our thinking in various forms, e.g., musicians, leaders, etc. are "born—not made." While one should acknowledge the existence of those rare individuals will seemingly superhuman aptitudes, according to the author, most "experts" in whatever field reach the pinnacle through a combination of factors—factors within the reach of mere mortals!

Amazon.com: Customer reviews: Bounce: The Myth of Talent ...
I have to say that Bounce was a bit like taking a refresher course, having already read Geoff Covlin's Talent Is Overrated, Daniel Coyle's The Talent Code, and Malcolm Gladwell's Outliers, all three of which Syed acknowledges as worthy predecessors.

Bounce: Mozart, Federer, Picasso, Beckham, and the Science ...
Bounce is crammed with fascinating stories and statistics. Looking at controversial questions such as whether talent is more important than practice, drugs in sport (and life) and whether black people really are faster runners, the mind-bending Bounce is a must-read for the hardened sports nut or brand new convert.

It's in the sports arena that the talent myth has blossomed the most. People assume that to be a top tennis player you have to be born with faster reactions or for a top golfer, better hand-eye co-ordination than most people. To become a top chess player or musician, you'd also have to be born with the relevant genetic advantages.

Fourth Estate Matthew Syed - TLF Research
Matthew explains why some people thrive under pressure and others choke, He weighs the value of innate ability against that of practice, hard work and will. From sex to maths, from the motivation of children to the culture of big business, Bounce shows how competition provides a master key with which to unlock the mysteries of success.

Bounce: The Myth of Talent and The Power of Practice ...
In Bounce (2011), Matthew Syed explores the origins of outstanding achievements in fields like sports, mathematics and music. He argues that it is intensive training, not natural ability that determines our success, and people who attribute great performances to natural gifts will probably miss their own chance to succeed due to lack of practice.

Bounce by Matthew Syed
The book is must read as it breaks the myth that some people have special talent to be able to make it to the top. The book disproves the myth by citing lot of examples of people who worked hard to rise to the top.
